The FSA is an awful method. The teachers have to move so quickly to get through the materials that they are losing the children. I have an older child by 13 years who never had the stress placed on her to pass a state standardized test and I never had to spend so many hours actually TEACHING her and myself how to do this common core nonsense. I was able to actually support her like I should be now. It is not a reflection on the school or the staff but the State of FL and the Superintendent. Her class grades are honor roll material but she is in danger of not passing these tests! Therefore not passing the grade. It is shameful.

My child does not take these test this year.

Never got any information on this subject

I do not feel informed on what my child is learning, sometimes only when helping with his homework. We never received any information about "new math" strategy for learning, so I could not understand how to help him. Every meeting I have had with his teacher is, "keep practicing his reading everyday only to receive a letter from the principle regarding "poor performance." I have had to reach-out to the school in response only to be told, his teach is the point of contact. I feel incredibly frustrated and unsure how to help my child.

I'm glad we have the resources to seek our own sources of information.

I am a teacher.
